Don't Miss Out!

The COPE Foundation Inc., an acronym for Connecting Our Paths Eternally, is a non-profit grief and healing organization dedicated to helping parents and families living with the loss of a child. In 1996, a group of parents living with the loss of a child gathered together for solace and support. They began meeting informally in the safety of each other's homes, finding comfort and support by being together and freely expressing their grief with others who could understand. Through this sense of community, they were able to thrive and impact each other's lives while remaining eternally connected to their children. They began reaching out to other parents living with the loss of their children, and their group grew into a larger network. Their experiences together generated love and hope, resulting in the creation of COPE, a foundation dedicated to providing emotional support to individuals and families who are struggling to cope with life after loss.

COPE, which became a 501(c)(3) in 1999, has grown from a select group of families meeting in each other's homes to a support network of over 800 families, gathering and healing through COPE at Cedarmere in Roslyn, NY, as well as generously donated locations on Long Island. COPE's programs have expanded to include: integrative healing workshops; a grief hotline; professional forums for schools, funeral homes, clergy, and mental health professionals; and Camp Erin® NYC - a free weekend bereavement camp for children and teens ages 6-17 who are grieving the death of someone close to them; as well as a concurrent parent retreat.
